Note

The Cost of transmission of books maps furniture as Cartage and Coolly, is met from the Contingent allowance of the Central Book Depot But it is paid in the first instance by Branch Depot Keepers from the sale proceeds, since the latter have no other money to pay it from On receipt of accounts from them, the Curator adjusts the Charges of transmission by drawing an equal amount from the Depot Contingent allowance and paying it back to the Treasury to be credited as sale proceeds Since however the whole of the amount is not thus adjusted before the close of the year the figures in Column 7 differ from those in Column 8 The Value of the stock at the end of each year also differs from the actual Value after the transactions of the year, as some books sold in the Branch Depots are shown as being in stock till the Charges on account of Cartage and Coolly are adjusted – and the difference in this respect is just equal to the difference between the amount spent for Cartage and Coolly and the amount paid back to the Treasury by the Curator in abeyance till the views of the Retrenchment committee on the expts in the Civ. Depts are before Govt - Hence no orders as to the transfer of funds also

If there is a vacancy I do not see that there is a case for granting these increments in advance of due dates A rule loses its force if constant exemptions are granted as has been done of late - Probably promotion on the file in usual course will settle matters by then -

As regards verification of stock I do not understand why this should require the depot be closed for 2 months The stock taken can easily be verified by the daily balance of each book which is kept with the sales -
